LONDON, November 28.

The addreſs preſented to his majeſty on wedneſday laſt by the lord-mayor, aldermen, and commons of the city of London, was as follows:

Moſt gracious Sovereign,

AMIDST the general joy of the nation for your majeſty's ſafe and happy return to your Britiſh dominions, be pleaſed to accept the ſincere congratulations of your majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal ſubjects, the lord-mayor, aldermen, and commons of your city of London, in common-council aſſembled.

Permit us, at the ſame time, royal Sir, to repeat the juſt and grateful ſenſe we have of your majeſty's paternal care over your people, and of the many favours by which your majeſty hath graciouſly diſtinguiſhed your city of London.

May the divine providence long preſerve your majeſty, to reign over theſe kingdoms; and may there never be wanting a ſucceſſion of princes in your royal houſe, formed by your great example, to continue the bleſſings of civil and religious freedom to lateſt poſterity.

To which addreſs his majeſty was pleaſed to return this moſt gracious anſwer.

'I thank you for this very dutiful and affectionate addreſs. The ſupport and improvement of the trade and commerce of my people, is ſo eſſential to the welfare and proſperity of my kingdoms, that the city of London may always depend upon my particular attention to it, and upon the continuance of my favour and protection.'

London, Nov. 18. According to ſome private letters from Paris, the chancellor has had thoughts of reſigning; the old biſhop of Mirepoix is in a tottering condition; and the count de Maurepas is like to get in again, notwithſtanding the power, influence, and reſentment of thoſe, who endeavour to keep him out.

By a private letter from Edinburgh we hear, that nothing is ſpoken off but enlarging the town, making additional ſtreets, of building a bridge over the North Lough, and of cleanſing the canal which the French uſed of old in bringing their goods from Leith to that part of the city called the Caltoun, which laſt would be of the utmoſt advantage to the place.

By ſome private letters in town from ſeveral parts of the north of Scotland, we hear, that a ſpirit of induſtry has ſpread of late ſo much among the inhabitants, that in time they may vie in wealth and opulence with the richeſt of the Southern provinces.

Preparations are making at Portſmouth, Plymouth, Dover, &c. for embarking troops, in order the better to ſecure our ſettlements in the Weſt-Indies.
